

Introducing Thinking Maps

Here is an example of how all eight Thinking Maps may be applied to organizing information and developing a concept. The example is "red roses."

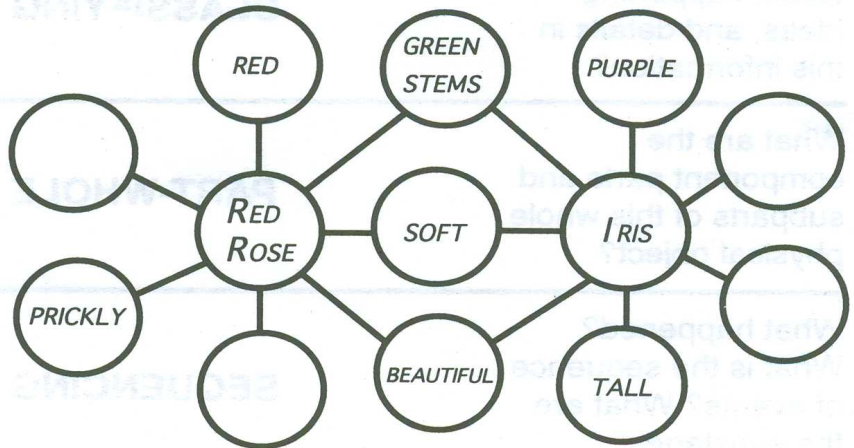

What do you know about red roses?

How would you describe a particular red rose?
What are its qualities?

What are the similarities and differences between a red rose and an iris?

How could you classify a rose?

